

15 Jobs in the Law Enforcement Field that Use Technology (there's more!)

Ballistics Expert: Uses technology to analyze firearms, ammunition, and bullet trajectories in criminal investigations. Average salary: $70,000.

Counter-Terrorism Analyst: Employs technology to analyze threats, gather intelligence, and prevent terrorist activities. Average salary: $85,000.

Crime Data Analyst: Analyzes crime statistics and data using software to identify patterns and trends. Average salary: $60,000.

Crime Scene Technician: Collects and processes evidence at crime scenes using specialized equipment and software. Average salary: $50,000.

Criminal Intelligence Officer: Gathers, evaluates, and disseminates intelligence using specialized software and databases. Average salary: $80,000.

Cybercrime Investigator: Investigates crimes involving computers, networks, and digital evidence. Average salary: $80,000.

Digital Evidence Custodian: Manages and maintains digital evidence storage and retrieval systems. Average salary: $55,000.

Digital Forensics Expert: Recovers and examines data from digital devices to aid criminal investigations. Average salary: $90,000.

Drone Operator: Utilizes drones and aerial technology for surveillance, search and rescue, and evidence gathering. Average salary: $55,000.

Evidence Management Specialist: Uses digital tools to track and maintain physical and digital evidence in a secure environment. Average salary: $48,000.

Facial Recognition Specialist: Uses facial recognition software to identify suspects from surveillance footage. Average salary: $68,000.

Forensic Analyst: Analyzes physical and digital evidence using advanced technology and forensic tools. Average salary: $65,000.

Intelligence Analyst: Uses data analytics tools and software to gather and interpret information for crime prevention. Average salary: $76,000.

Predictive Policing Analyst: Uses software tools to predict crime trends and deploy resources effectively. Average salary: $70,000.

Surveillance Specialist: Operates and maintains advanced surveillance equipment and software to monitor and track suspects. Average salary: $58,000.